Known as one of the most prolific astrophysicists of our time, Neil deGrasse Tyson first showed an interest in astronomy in his teens and gained fame by giving astronomy lectures at 15 years old. He showed such promise that world-renowned astronomer Carl Sagan tried to recruit Tyson to Cornell University for his undergraduate education. He instead chose to study at Harvard for undergrad and later at the University of Texas at Austin and Columbia University for his Master's and Ph.D., respectively.
