Amplify Credit Union Commits to “A Safe Place to Call Home” for Central Texans

AUSTIN, Texas – July 26, 2018 – On the heels of its 50th anniversary, Amplify Credit Union is poised for future growth and preparing to increase its impact in the Austin area even further with a focus on social endeavors under the name “a safe place to call home.”

“As a credit union, ‘care for community’ is one of the cooperative principles on which we’re founded, so giving back is an integral part of how we do business, and always has been,” said Amplify Credit Union CEO Paul Trylko. “Looking ahead, we’re going to expand the impact we create in Central Texas as our credit union grows. To do that, we know we must focus our time, energy and resources on the challenges we’re best equipped to address, and ‘a safe place to call home’ is a natural extension of what we do every day.”

As a financial cooperative, Amplify Credit Union offers a wide variety of products and services, including home loans, which are a key driver of prosperity for its members. Amplify Credit Union employees are passionate about helping Central Texans purchase homes and use the equity they’ve built through homeownership to accomplish other financial goals. However, they also know many in the region don’t have a safe place to call home. That’s why they want to focus contributions of time, talent and treasure to close that gap in the many ways it emerges in our community, such as:

- Aiding those displaced from their homes through natural disasters;
