Therapy in VR.
Helping individuals
develop and maintain social connections.

We believe VR will be the future in teaching essential relationship skills to individuals with AS.

Virtual Reality will transform the way that individuals with AS learn social skills and improve relationship development.

Researchers have used VR since the mid-1990s to help individuals with AS to navigate stressful situations and rehearse job interviews. While this platform has been successful in the past, only in the last three years is VR accessible to the public.

Using VR and cinematic filmmaking, our curriculum teaches social skills to persons with AS so that that the experience mirrors real life interactions. Additionally, SWVR includes a data tracking tool that monitors timed response, gaze, and correct response.
