

Due Diligence and Portfolio Assessments

At some point in a company's life-cycle there will be a need or desire for an independent assessment of a patent or IP portfolio. This could be due to a financing event that mandates review of the company's portfolio (i.e., an investor financing round or an initial public offering), the company may be selling or acquiring intellectual property, or the company may be considering in- or out-licensing rights to a patent or portfolio. In many cases, the company's success may depend upon the results of this assessment, and it can be critically important to identify, evaluate and correct portfolio defects before they become obstacles.

BrainSpark attorneys are highly proficient in the analysis and assessment of patents and IP portfolios. Where you are expecting a due diligence review in the future, we can provide a pre-assessment review of your chosen portfolio to identify portfolio deficiencies. We can also create a comprehensive and reasonable plan to correct serious deficiencies, or take additional steps to assess and/or minimize the perceived impact a defect might have on the portfolio at large. We are also experienced in providing IP due diligence reviews that supplement a non-IP law firm's due diligence assessment of your company.

Let us provide you with the peace of mind that your patent and IP portfolios are ready for outside scrutiny. Put our experience to work for you.
