I'm hoping the New York Times will put some money into the app that they've bought. It's so close to being great. The publications are great, the narrators are great, but the biggest failure as mentioned is the lack of a decent browse / filter function. Plenty of other app glitches I'm willing to accept, but not being able to sort the extensive library using simple filters is a massive oversight (something like, I don't know...maybe the new york times website?!).

The content is incredible. The functionality is nonexistent. Takes forever to load, crashes constantly, doesn't remember your place, won't function without a signal (even though you download the content to the local device)... constant frustration. NY Times, please hire competent engineers.

I am within the trial period and I am already happy with all that I am reading. I do find it funny that you save more money ($0.11) in the long run by subscribing monthly vs annually. This is the first subscription model I see that is like that. Normally, there is more saving when committing to a long term subscription but oh well.
