Like a one-two punch to the codpiece, Last of My Kind from Nicaragua hits the palate like a velvet JDAM. Around here at CP HQ, we smoke new blends all the time – samples and existing brands both big and small, you name it, on the regular. There's a lot of average stuff. Some are ho-hum or even pretty good, and some are awful, but every now and then there's something special. This blend from Raymond Pages out of Esteli is one of those special ones.

Last of My Kind is a full-bodied, robust, complex cigar brimming with leather flavors, there is no doubt. But that is said of many cigars. This one is hard to do justice because it has layers upon layers of flavor and more complexity than most. The wrapper looks perfect, oily, Habano, dark, toothy. Firm throughout, the cold draw brings notes of raisins and coffee. Toasting it delivers a razor sharp burn line and very white, firm ash that holds. Flavor
