What Happened To The Old USPC™?

U.S. real estate investing is a great inflation hedge... but it's usually off-limits due to illiquidity and high capital requirements.

Historically speaking, the long-term appreciation of U.S. real estate has tended to greatly outpace inflation. However, the traditional barriers to investing in real estate have made it difficult for many people to take advantage of this inflation-fighting asset class. This is especially true for international investors, who have faced significant restrictions and regulations when seeking to invest in U.S. real estate from overseas.

Tokenized real estate makes U.S. real estate investing more accessible with fractional investing and low capital requirements.

You can now securely store your value and beat inflation with USP - all while taking advantage of greater liquidity than traditional real estate investments offer. USP breaks down the existing value of an entire income-producing real estate portfolio inside of the United States and then distributes that value to token holders using blockchain technology.

A better store of value...

Storing your value with in tokenized real estate allows you to benefit from the long-term appreciation of U.S. real estate that tends to outpace inflation and gain greater liquidity than traditional investments offer, all with as little as $1. When you own USP, your value lives in real estate - not on the blockchain. This means your value is not subject to crypto market volatility, and yet, it benefits from the decentralized and peer-to-peer nature of blockchain technology.
