Does the job, great price. One minor item.. see below.,

July 10, 2008

By JoelNale (North Bergen, NJ) - See all my reviews

This review is from: Tweezerman Men's Shaving Brush (Health and Beauty)

Badger hair shaving brushes are not the cheapest items in the world. Not to mention usually you get what you pay for; however I have to say that this brush bucks that trend.

The brush does the job at a price MUCH better than the competitors.

My one minor issue:

-the first brush I bought repeatedly would lose hairs each time I used it. I hoped it would stop at some point but this went on for a month or so. In a strange sort of luck, I managed to leave the brush behind on a business trip and had to purchase a new one. The new brush works like a charm.

Ad feedback

In a nutshell, I would not hesitate, if you need a shaving brush and do NOT want to pay an arm and a leg then this is the brush for you.

On a side note, if you are considering this brush you should also consider (if you have not already) switching to a Safety Razor rather than the economy razors you find in the supermarket. My shaving experience and outcome has changed considerably as a result of using this brush as well as the safety razor. My recommendation for a safety razor: Merkur Classic Safety Razor, Straight - #178

As far as shaving soap and blades goes: check out eBay as well as Amazon

Best bang for buck shaving brush, March 2, 2008

By scfdefinit (San Diego, CA USA) - See all my reviews

This review is from: Tweezerman Men's Shaving Brush (Health and Beauty)

I've gotten this brush about a month ago and it has held up pretty well. At $15 it is the best value pure badger brush on the market. At first it's a little stiff. It loses a few bristles here and there but after a few uses it breaks in. I haven't lost a bristle in weeks and its gotten softer. Of course there are better best badger brushes and silvertip badger brushes on the market but be prepared to pay $40-200 USD for a quality badger brush. The Tweezerman makes a good starter brush at $15. Why even bother to buy a synthetic or boar brush (both don't hold water well) when you can get this one for $15? I plan to upgrade to a better/softer brush down the line but the Tweezerman is treating me well and in the future will make an excellent back up or travel brush. I recommend this brush for anyone who decides to start traditional wet shaving.

But they really do. I had a boar's hair brush before this, and the badger bristles really are far superior. It takes a lot less soap to make a good lather with the badger. If you're a brush user, definitely give it a try.

My first shaving brush

This is my first shaving brush. I like it a lot. The price was good, and the quality seems good. I have used it half a dozen times in the last 3 weeks, wish only a few hairs...

Pretty great brush for a beginner

I am new to DE shaving, so I didn't want to invest too much initially. Along with my Merkur razor, I purchased the Tweezerman Brush, and I'm impressed with its quality.

Pretty good, for a Beginner

The Tweezerman Shave brush is brush that Works well for 'Face-Lathering'. It does not hold enough lather or water to bowl lather for me. Read more

Whats not to love

Let me start by saying that I first used the Van Der Hagen Premium Shave Set and the brush was a big let down with coarse hairs that were falling out all the time.

Excellent brush

A lot of reviews will patronizingly call this "good starter brush", or "good for the price". It is that, but I've found it to be a good brush, period. Read more great economy shave brush!

The Tweezerman Men's Shaving Brush is a great quality brush for the money. The knob is full and the handle is a nicely finished piece of wood. Read more good but could be better

As other reviews have said, it drops the occasional bristle. It works well for the price. It makes for a good starting point until I feel like spending $40 or so on my next brush.
