Our Story

Having lived and worked at our family's olive oil mill and groves in Southern Spain, our lives changed forever in 1999 when we fell in love with the beauty of freshly made extra virgin olive oil. Recognizing the lack of fresh olive oil in the US over the next ten years, we sold our family's fresh olive oil to some of the nation's finest restaurants and retail outlets while garnering praise from the national food media.

While we were promoting our olive oil wholesale business we realized low quality and/or adulterated olive oil was flooding the US market and it was very difficult for us to compete as a producer. It was shocking to see how little fresh extra virgin olive was actually on the market.

We started Seasons in 2009 with the goal of educating the public about the culinary and health benefits of fresh super premium extra virgin olive oil and balsamic condimento vinegars. Our vision of selling product based on quality, objective testing and winning international awards, instead of romantic stories of olive groves and imagery of the Mediterranean, were common objectives we both held dear. Since then, our olive oil odyssey has led us to open four family owned and operated stores. Passion for fresh olive oil and high quality vinegars shines in all that we do at each seasons location whether it be educational classes, partnering with local restaurants or chef driven cooking demonstrations.

We strive to share our passion with you in store and online as we promote a food culture driven by healthy eating, education and interaction with you, our customer.

Yours in Great Olive Oil & Vinegar,

Tim Balshi & Scraya Aguilar Balshi

Seasons, the nation's largest kosher supermarket chain, which was forced to declare bankruptcy late last year, is returning to Westchester with new owners.

Under the management of businessman Joseph Bistrizky's family, Seasons will be reopening their 12,000-square-foot location in Scarsdale, in time for Passover. Other openings are planned in Clifton, Lakewood, Lawrence and Queens,

The Scarsdale location will reopen at 1 p.m. on Sunday, March 3 in the Golden Horseshoe Shopping Center on Wilmot Road.

The new location will seem supersized to shoppers, with a new state-of-the-art kitchen and additional food production facilities. The new kitchens will allow for the production of food without the use of dairy or meat equipment, thus providing more options for shoppers.

"Seasons is welcoming the Scarsdale community to a renovated store with a completely new type of shopping experience," David Gellman, the general manager of Seasons Scarsdale said. "Once containing only seven doors, the freezer aisle is now 36 doors long. A dairy section once spanning only 6 feet is now 72 feet long. Our renovations were driven from our commitment to provide more family value options for our customers."

Seasons once had national ambitions, but at the time of the bankruptcy filing, they were reportedly more than $40 million in debt. Now, they plan to test the waters in the New York City area before expanding.

"Each member of our family brings a different strength to our team. Together, we have years of familiarity with kosher food manufacturing and distribution," Bistrizky said when announcing the relaunch. We have redeveloped the operational side of many businesses, by forming and training managerial teams to have a keen understanding of community relations and family interface.

"It is an honor to serve the Jewish communities of Scarsdale, Clifton, Lakewood, Lawrence and Queens. We look forward to

Seasons, the kosher supermarket chain that declared bankruptcy last year, has new owners and is reopening one of its closed locations.

The bankruptcy filing in September was big news because Seasons, founded in New York City's Queens borough in 2011, had national ambitions. In addition to stores across the city, Seasons had opened a location in Maryland and was on the verge of doing so in Ohio.

But those stores were closed, along with the Seasons supermarkets on Manhattan's Upper West Side and in suburban Scarsdale, New York. At the time of the bankruptcy filing, Seasons was more than $40 million in debt. Though the debt is still being dealt with, a spokesman told JTA that management is "charging full steam ahead."

According to a news release sent Thursday, Seasons is under the ownership of the family of businessman Joseph Bistrizky, CEO of the Maramont Corp., a food services company.

The Scarsdale location will be one of six stores to open, but the chain wants to make sure it can succeed in and around New York City, so national ambitions are on hold. The Upper West Side Seasons also will remain closed. In addition to Scarsdale and Queens, Seasons will continue operating stores in two New Jersey locations, Clifton and Lakewood, and two others in Lawrence in the heavily Jewish Five Towns area of suburban Long Island, New York.

"Together, we have years of familiarity with kosher food manufacturing and distribution," Bistrizky said in the news release. "We have redeveloped the operational side of many businesses, by forming and training managerial teams to have a keen understanding of community relations and family interface."

Seasons Kosher Grocery Chain Gets New Owners

Source: Specialty Food News
Categories: Industry Operations; Retailers
Tags: Store Expansions; grocery

Kosher grocery chain Seasons is remodeling locations under its new ownership, the Bistricky family, reports Newsday. The Bistricky family purchased the chain in late 2018 from Zvi Bloom and Mayer Golt, though the purchase price was private. The Bistricky family has years of experience with kosher food manufacturing and distribution, according to Joseph Bistricky, chairman of the board of Seasons and chief executive of Brooklyn-based food services company Maramont Corp.

Plans include widening aisles, expanding produce sections, car valet services, new appliances, and new kitchens for on-site cooking. The store in Scarsdale, N.Y., relocated to a larger location in the same shopping center and renovations are ongoing at five other stores. Full Story
