Unemployment claims can wring profits from your small to mid-sized business. Combat the squeeze with Unemployment Claims Administration and Contesting Services from MyHRConcierge.

Quick Facts About Unemployment Taxes

- Losing an unemployment claim can increase your taxes for the following 3 years.
- Unemployment tax rates and rules vary by state. Rates can vary from .1% to 15.1% based on how much you pay employees and the number of unemployment claims from the previous financial year.
- Employers pay a state unemployment tax (SUTA). It funds State Unemployment Insurance (SUI) benefits for employees who are out of work through no fault of their own.

When to Consider Contesting Unemployment Claims

Your business should consider contesting unemployment claims if:

- You believe an employee is ineligible for unemployment benefits.
- You have high worker turnover.
- You are concerned about raising SUI rates.
- A former employee may file a wrongful termination claim.
- A claim is filed with false or misreported information.

An Affordable Way to Put the Brakes on SUI Costs

You Have More Control than You Think

If you think state unemployment taxes are just the cost of doing business, think again. Many business owners have found significant savings by identifying and contesting claims with false or misreported information as well as those from ineligible employees.

The Opportunity with High-Turnover, Low-Wage Workforces

Grocers, retailers, restaurants, hospitality, and other businesses with low-wage, high-turnover workforces are particularly vulnerable to improper claims. These businesses often have a significant opportunity to reduce SUI tax costs by challenging improper claims.

Successfully Contest Questionable Claims

Challenging unjustifiable claims on your own can be frustrating and time consuming. Even when the employee is clearly not eligible, you will lose unless you know how to make your case and follow the process set forth by the state.

But doing nothing leaves you exposed to tax rate increases that wring profits from your bottom line. For an affordable monthly fee, MyHRConcierge will handle the basics of contesting questionable claims for you.
