NEW ACTIVITY

Carol Jernigan · 23 hrs

First of all I imported the J from Victor because I did not like the one that matched the side letters. That being said, I was trying hard to center the J, not center all three initials, & it was hard because of the longer tail on the K. So I failed a little on that note, but what is worse, when I cut the scrap cutaway off, I realized I had used fusible interfacing. If someone irons it the collar will be fused to the yoke. Should I just go ahead & iron some pink gingham to it? I used heavy cutaway in case there are future daughters & it would be easier to remove (but not if I iron it). But just cross that bridge when I get to it?

I've tested quite a few MWP fonts for monograms on fluffy Sherpa Jackets and have come to the conclusion that I need to add knockdown stitching to get a more professional look. I want to use Master Circle and use

perked me when she was having problems getting her lettering just right for her knit her knit was the color she wanted. The white just doesn't show well on the knit. But alas, the lettering just wasn't "knit" enough for my taste.

Just as they're having some depth and the business, changing at 100% scale. Making a 2 inch one will be the challenge!

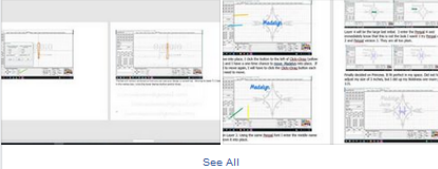

is a total of 120 squares across, which gives an actual height of 120 (just across). In this one, I'm concerned about the width of just 2 inches (just across). It will be too wide and for adjustments, I got the Business at 100 (just across).

Looking at this setting, I immediately see that the width of the four outer letters is too small for a knit. So, I suggested she set the letter width to 120 as well.

Again, there is not enough width to the outer letters. We try adjusting Business and letter width each to 100 (just across).

We notice that the width of the inner letter will not show well either - even making it wider and those of hers of 400 is a struggle in the middle. I can "test" letter width by "highlighting" the text (it is included with business font, which spans around 120 (just across).
