Predator Hunting Calls

As predator populations rise, predator calls are seeing their day in the sun. Get in on the action with Knight & Hale's line of realistic, enticing predator calls. Predator calls can imitate the predators themselves with coyote calls, fox calls or bobcat calls. Or, they imitate the predators' prey with prey-in-distress calls such as rabbit calls or mouse calls.

Knight & Hale predator calls feature Mylar and metal reeds, plus a dual or triple reed system. These create unequalled volume and realistic barks, yips and howls that coyotes, foxes, bobcats and other large predators can't resist.

Knight & Hale prey calls easily produce authentic anguished prey sounds. These calls mimic the whines, squeaks, screams and squeals of distressed prey. Knight & Hale prey-in-distress predator calls compel any predator that hears them to come and investigate.

One of the most effective ways to call in a predator is to use both a predator call and a prey in distress call. When you start with a coyote bark, throw in a prey-in-distress sound, and then finish up with a few more barks, a coyote won't be able to resist coming to investigate.

Ultimate Predator I Distress Call

The Ultimate Predator I was specifically designed to lure the wariest of all predatory animals, bobcats and coyotes. The call features a unique sound unlike any other in the predator hunter's arsenal.

The new barrel design has an ergonomic look and feel. The Threadlock® barrel threads into the shortened end piece for ease of disassembly. The wedge, reed and sound board are also changed, so the reed "locks" into place. This allows the call to be reassembled just as it came from the factory - every time. The end result is a great sounding, user friendly, compact call, with a lot of volume.
