This would probably be a great bag if the construction weren't so shoddy. The one I bought the stitching on the zipper failed the first time I closed it after putting my tools in it. Might make a good homeowner bag, but if you're a professional tradesman I don't see this thing lasting more than a month or two before it falls apart completely. Do yourself a favor, spend the extra money and get either a Veto or a Klein.

Type very fast and order one or two! The new line of Crescent Tool bags is a great investment! The bag arrived on time and enclosed in a plastic bag for added protection (nice touch!). The Crescent CTB2010 is an excellent wide mouth bag that has lots of internal and external pockets and holds a ton of tools inside as well. I really liked the fact that even though you fill it up it will still close and zippered shut because of its shape and design. Its orange color is also very distinctive and makes finding tools easier against its backdrop. The bag material is also very durable, solid and rugged and its designed to take the abuse of a jobsite, work truck or a home shop for years to come and includes a multi yr. warranty as well! Compare to other bags I have owned this one is a new favorite and highly recommended! Crescent has several bags in this line of varied sizes including closed and open top bags as well as a rugged backpack. If this one doesn't work for your needs check out the others as well!

I wanted to love this bag. Not just like but love. I didn't want to spend double on a Veto but I should have.

The pockets are open. As much as I thought I could get past this, I don't like all of my bits or small parts collecting at the bottom of the bag.

The seams, zipper tag and external side pocket are all losing thread which speaks of the bags durability and craftsmanship. Which is subpar as it's only been 4 months of 3 day a week use in a residential setting. (I've had my veto bag 5 years and not one busted seam).

The shoulder strap clip broke within a month. The bag wasn't fully loaded it over loaded.

I attempted to return to Amazon but according to them I had passed the available time limit. $100 down the drain

Bought this bag few months ago had been a good bag but the front pouch straps are not heavy duty they have already ripped. Also 2 side pockets are junk ripped within first few days other than that it is a good tool bag just not as heavy duty as advertised

I was doing research on bags and I came across this. My intentions at first was to buy the veto bag anybody in the trade knows that's like the Nike of tech bags. With that being said I kept doing research and decided I would give this a try and it's a 150 dollars cheaper. This bag has exceeded my expectations. I love how they built this bag the size the pockets the compartments etc. This is a very good bag and well worth the money.

I'm actually impressed with the quality given some of the prior reviews I read. Zippers feel pretty heavy duty compared to other tool backpacks, and it's very sturdy. However, it's damn heavy so be wary of that if your looking for a lighter option. Much more affordable than the Veto but also a little smaller. Pretty good substitute though in my opinion!

Been overstuffing with hvac gear & thrown around for 2weeks so far. I'm pretty optimistic its gonna be very comparable to a Veto bag in overall quality/durability.
