I abused it but it still impressed me

I bought this for an elk hunting trip in the mountains. My main concern was just having a solid place to rest my rifle while in the stand. I also wanted to be able to deploy it quickly in case I was walking and saw something.

The sad part is I didn't see anything. However I discovered that the bog adrenaline is both a sturdy gun rest and a capable walking/trekking stick. I planned to have it's lightness strapped to my bag and pull it out at stands. However I quickly grew fond of having it fully extended but folded and using it to brace myself as well. I often put my weight on it as I crossed creeks and walked along logs. It's light enough that it doesn't fatigue your arm carrying it all day. It's heavy enough that you can set it down and you know it's planted already if you lose your balance you can put your weight on it. I know that's not what it's meant for but I like multipurpose items especially in the backcountry. And honestly if it holds my weight and steadily holds my 15.4lb rifle it will work well in any situation.

Yes, I recommend this product.

Very modular

Great lightweight tripod a d switcheroo is very nice. Have most of the attachments- my only issue is when I called customer service and asked about keyhole to arca Swiss compatibility or if they made such an adaptor... got no help. They didn't understand my question.

Yes, I recommend this product.
