ABOUT THIS GAME

Noita is a magical action roguelite set in a world where every pixel is physically simulated. Fight, explore, melt, burn, freeze and evaporate your way through the procedurally generated world using spells you've created yourself. Explore a variety of environments ranging from coal mines to freezing wastelands while delving deeper in search for unknown mysteries.

- Pixel-based physics: Every pixel in the world is simulated. Burn, explode or melt anything. Swim in the blood of your foes! Enter a simulated world that is more interactive than anything you've seen before.
- Your own magic: Combine spells to create your own magic as you delve deeper into the caverns. Use magic to crush your enemies and manipulate the world around you.
- Procedurally generated world: Explore a unique world every time you play. Discover new environments as you adventure deeper.

Have you ever been tripping on mushrooms and accidentally drink super rare urine off the floor because you thought it was a shield potion but it actually caused you to vomit lava on your feet but you're immune to fire so you drown instead? That's how it feels to play Noita.

If you're thinking about buying this game, just buy it. It has an incredibly, unbelievably robust gameplay loop, with new permutations and possibilities guaranteed on every attempt. The physics simulation is an absolute revelation, and the way different spells and perks and wands interact with the environment creates a tapestry unlike any other game. Buy it.

(As a side note, put a podcast or tv show on, and this becomes the perfect way to occupy your lizard brain while digesting another piece of media. If you've got ADD/ADHD, this is an awesome way to fill your time.)

Short Review

The base experience is very fun, unforgiving, and a good sandbox roguelike (technically lite I guess) experience. Beyond that however, I find that the game can sort of fall off and become really repetitive/convoluted. I recommend this game however, mainly because I believe that the first few times you realize and explore the world beyond the "boundaries" the game just changes completely. Also, the large majority of players do not even touch upon the stuff that bothers me so it's unlikely the average player will go far beyond the base experience. If you REALLY enjoy uncovering REALLY obscure secrets then this is Played. Got Noited. Came back. Punishing roguelike where you WILL die a lot, but when your wand turns half your screen into a techno-colored deathray that kills you because you didn't see the explosive canister flying at you, it all becomes worth it.

Honestly, I have absolutely no idea if I like this game or not. It's the most frustrating, difficult, complicated, and deep game I've played in a long long time. But I've definitely played a lot of it. I can't seem to put it down... Every run I learn something new, or feel like I'm improving (even after 100 hours).

As a game dev myself, I hold this (and baba is you) as the gold standard for innovation in video games.

I think both of them are MUST PLAY games for anyone that's even remotely interesting in video games as a media.

knowledge to be gained from playing this game in order to get better, but unfortunately some of it will have to come from outside sources like youtube videos. The actual difficulty curve of the game isn't perfect, and I found that stage 3 was a huge determining factor in whether my runs would end, or approach god levels. BUT, there was a consistent improvement on MY end with regards to skill, and getting better.
