When I tell people I play video games for a living, that is immediately followed by the same question every time: "Oh are you on Twitch?" While I have to explain that I'm a journalist and not the next Ninja or Dr. Lupo, more and more kids, teens and young adults are growing up wanting to emulate their streaming idols, some of whom are either doing so as a full time job, or on the higher end, making millions of dollars.

The path to get there is...rocky. Getting started in streaming now with

Right now it is possible to simply Google "how to stream for a living" and you'll have a lot of streamers and YouTubers writing articles or filming videos about the topic, about how they specifically found success, but Pipeline looks to be a dedicated program just for that, something I haven't seen elsewhere in the market. But it will cost you.

Pipeline operates as either a monthly membership ($29 a month) or yearly ($295). That gets you access to the Snooep/StoneMountain "playbook" of how to succeed in streaming, plus monthly live membership sessions, access to the private community of Pipeline streamers for cross-stream support and advice, and also discounts with some partnered hardware companies to bolster your stream set-up. The yearly pass gets you 1:1 sessions with Snooep and StoneMountain themselves.
