

Fiction/American West

"WESTERN FICTION AT ITS BEST."

New York Times

"DOROTHY JOHNSON IS THE BEST SHORT STORY WRITER OF THE CENTURY."

Western Writers of America

Dorothy M. Johnson wrote dozens of highly acclaimed western stories and books in her long career. The stories in this book are her very best. They were ranked as four of the top five stories of the 20th century by the Western Writers of America, with "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance" as number one. That story plus "A Man Called Horse" and "The Hanging Tree" became major Hollywood films. This is the first time Johnson's famous stories have been published together in one book.

"No one has written with more understanding of the mountain men and white settlers...no one has written with keener perception of the Indians themselves.... The people leap into life, unforgettable...each complete, fully realized, fully known. To read her stories is to know: This is the way life was lived in frontier settlement and in Indian village. This is part of the American heritage."

"The best of these tales...echo Bret Harte or Mark Twain."

Time Magazine

"The most brilliant woman Western tale teller since Mary Austin."

New York Journal-American

"Her works are marked by clean prose...and laconic wit."
